In this respect, climate can be influenced, even changed through leadership that involves shared purpose and values, open communication, cultural equity, healing-centered management practices, to name a few. Leaders who intentionally address changeable factors in the work environment can foster spaces that promote employee wellbeing, mitigating both the stress, and secondary trauma typical of work in the human services field.